The American Belting Collection is made using the finest American made, vegetable tanned leather, known as belting leather. Hartmann has been using belting leather since 1939. In that year, the president of Hartmann presented the belt of a flywheel to a tannery to show the strength and durability he expected for Hartmann products. Belting leather retains its natural characteristics such as barb wire marks and wrinkles, giving individuality not found in other leathers. Belting leather acquires an even more appealing finish as it ages, a unique characteristic known as burnish or patina.

In that year, the president of Hartmann presented the belt of a flywheel to a tannery to show the strength and durability he expected for Hartmann products. Belting leather retains its natural characteristics such as barb wire marks and wrinkles, giving individuality not found in other leathers. Belting leather acquires an even more appealing finish as it ages, a quality known as burnish or patina.
